Biography

I'm originally from the Philippines and I am now an artist based between Karlovy Vary and Prague. I grew up in a big family surrounded by love, laughter, and happy memories. Being the youngest, I was always the playful one, the little clown who loved to make everyone smile. I would dance and find joy in every small thing.

Growing up, art was never really a focus in our family. I only remember one moment when my Papa showed a creative side, when he helped my sister with a school art project. That is the single memory I have of him doing anything artistic.

Because of that, and because art did not seem like something that could lead to financial stability, I did not practise it much as a child. It stayed quietly in the background.

Now in my forties, I finally gave myself the chance to listen to that part of me. I started in a very simple way, with paint by numbers. When I finished my first one, I felt a deep sense of fulfilment, like I created something with my own hands.

That feeling pushed me to try more. I challenged myself to paint without any guide, just following my intuition. My first painting was a gift for my in laws' anniversary. I simply painted from the heart. They loved it, and that gave me the courage to continue.
